Charlie Battery Launching Area Construction Photographs - 1959

This set of three images document the Launching Area construction as it moves further along towards completion. Now there is a bit of conjecture here, however, in reading the land and the orientation of the structures, I am making my best guess as to what each photograph illustrates.

Image One appears to be the forming of Bravo Section's Revetment. Image Two looks like the big Berm along the service road up to Alpha Section. The base of the far left slope seems like where the Inner Security Area's main gate and guard shack should be. And Image Three, the way it is facing and with the downhill slope, looks the construction of Bravo Section's Missile Hanger.
